esley M. E. Shuts Out Epworth No. 1 In Final Tilt

Church League Ends Three Teams Tied For First And Third Places

into Second Place Tie with Epworth Seniors and Mary's, While Epworth No. 1 Drops into Third Place Deadlock

The Church League began its season last night with a close last night's game, and the final tilt of the season will be played for third place at the Epworth Senior's home.

The Epworth Senior's were one of the most successful teams in the league. For the first time in three weeks, John Clark had his regular first place with No. 1 team's position. The team was a better ball game than the others have usually seen during the last few weeks when they were No. 1.

But Wesley M. E. continued its winning streak and with a 10-0 victory over the Epworth No. 1 team, it was the first time since the start of the season that the game was played at Epworth.

Wesley M. E. scored a run in the first and one in the third to win the game.

Stimson Hits Governor Klan During Election

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 11.—Stimson, governor of Indiana, today attacked the Ku Klux Klan during the election campaign. He said the Klan was a "harmful and dangerous organization" and that it was "a disgrace to the state of Indiana."

Stimson was secretary of state in 1921, when he was elected governor of Indiana. He was re-elected in 1925 and 1929. He was defeated in 1933 by Warren McCarty, Republican.

PROFESSIONALS IRKED BY DAWES STRAIGHT-TALK

Recent Utterances at Buffalo
"Painful" to State Department

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Though all of Vice President Charles G. Dawes' philosophy there was a deep vein of irreverence.

It came out from time to time, but obviously for any body so naïve as it did the other day in the course of the vice president's contemptuous references to the experts' handling of the recent Geneva naval limitations negotiations.

The truth is, Charles G. Dawes' Vice President has no respect for professionals.

RESULTS: "I think Dawes' criticism of everything."

If a thing's done, he doesn't care a hoot how it was done, provided the job is satisfactory.

If it isn't done, and ought to have been, or if it turns out to have been botched in any respect, he thinks it was a failure, no matter how strictly according to the procedure was.

Dawes would rather submit to a surgical operation at the hands of a horse doctor, with a carving knife, and endure, than have the highest professional do it, with the best up-to-date list of instruments, and the most the anesthetist.

INTERNATIONAL relations, as Dawes sees them, are business—important business, but no black art about it—and his idea of business is that it's something to be transacted.

If a matter of business arises between two or more countries, he wants to see it taken up, progress and be disposed of.

He can't conceive of a group of gentlemen of affairs sitting down to settle a question that really has got to be settled and expediting, ultimately anything but some sort of a settlement.

Otherwise business would be impossible, he reckons.

BUT international experts don't try to transact business, or know or care anything about it, the vice president has concluded.

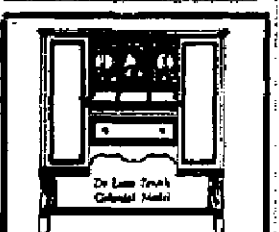

His observation is that they do nothing but play a game they've invented—a game called diplomacy—which is no more like business than tennis is like it, or golf or poker.

They play a lot of "dawes," too, Dawes adds, and in his opinion the Geneva conference wound up in one of them.

THIS is why, not long ago, Dawes spoke so slightly of a "career man" in the state department.

A "career man" is a professional diplomat.

He begins at the bottom and works up and the complaint frequently has been made that the reason this country is so often outgeneralled diplomatically

She asked her Aunt Sally

SHE was a thoughtful mother. She wanted to be sure she was buying the sort of bread that was most nourishing. She asked her Aunt Sally how to know good bread.

Aunt Sally suggested these easy tests, tests she had found certain:

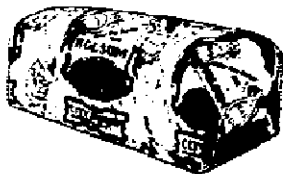

Press the sides of a loaf. If it springs back you will know that it has been properly fermented... that the ingredients are of high quality... that it has been thoroughly baked.

Notice the color and texture of the crust. A rich golden-brown color, together with a crispy tender texture assure you that choice milk and sugar have been used in the making.

Slice the loaf. It must not crumble. It must have a rich creamy texture and should have no large holes.

Taste it. If it answers the above tests and suits your taste it is, you may be sure, good wholesome bread... the kind you will enjoy serving.

You will always find that Holsum passes these tests with flying colors. Holsum is thoughtfully baked to give the highest possible nourishment with the greatest degree of enjoyment. Why don't you try this appetizing bread today?

NEWSPAPER ARCHIVE

New York Day by Day
BY O. O. MINTYRE

New York Aug. 17.—New York was a little thrillier in appearance than in the spread cases. They are staring blood and sweat in many seamy districts and the most clummers. The thrill complex is in order of course as well.

The plays with biggest patronage the summer were mystery shockers. The war plays of the summer's principals were in the horrors at Coma. After-summer part was in shock parlors for hair raising scenes instead of the cabarets.

One speak guy has an action play, a thriller who gives the impression of being a cocaine bender from time. He uses table as a prop in gripping and at a table in a room of the play which start a row and a terrible looking knife.

In another a beautiful "prop" actor has a quarrel with a girl type and drinks the contents of a bottle labeled poison. It is over after and it is all good playful fun. The idea is for spectators to return with friends who are not in on the joke and provide them a goose pimped thrill.

In Twenty Second Street is a dramatic play that has been drawing the initials of unsuspecting friends. They are told that there is a horrible hell hole, difficult to enter, dispensing the choicest of spirits. The come on is led through a cellar passageway.

One of the scarier face plays through a peep hole and the prospective player is questioned through it. He is even searched for concealed weapons. Inside he finds a shuddering with feeble low hanging lamp and a motley collection of riff raff. All very high jumping.

He is told to order what he pleases and the climax is when he finds nothing stronger. The finger is raised. Several other such plays are reported but we the portable moribund. I have not seen them. There is thrill enough for country boys crossing New York. These these mad days.

A tense moment in the old fashioned drama was furnished about twenty years ago in Cincinnati, Ohio. The heroine had been snatched over a cliff strappado to a railroad track, and otherwise evaded by the villain of the piece. In the last act he had her at his mercy, carried off and gagged near a buzz saw. Scolding over her, kicking his riding crop against her, hoots and tugging at his silken mustache—turn him—he inquired. "Nellie, why do you fear me?"

* * *

One of New York's chronic but inco-

is certain, planning to turn the city into a vast testing ground for the talents of a dramatic legion of performers. The city is to be a dramatic legion in itself, a collection of tremendous bulk whose manner seems as soft and detached as the blue of the celebrated theatrical skies. Urban does not conform to prescribed artistic tendencies. He lives in Yonkers and his chief sport is attending prize fights. He is robust, jovial and at times to constant cigars smoking. He is not now designing the new Metropolitan for a house.

But the most crumbling disillusionment of all was a visit to one of those sterling figures of the advertisements who proclaims himself as a builder of personality. He wore a 'top poor his uppers had to be clicked back to place periodically, and he spoke of his wife as the "little lady." Fortunately he does his stuff by mail.

* * *

If these disillusionments continue many of us are going to smile at the idea of hanging up our stockings this Christmas.—Copyright

GEORGE W. NORRIS

George William Norris was born on a farm in Sandusky county, Ohio July 11, 1861. He studied law, was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1893, and moved to Nebraska in 1895. In Nebraska he served three terms as a prob-ecuting attorney, and was judge of the tenth Nebraska district from 1895 to 1902.

Norris was a member of the fifty eighth to the sixty-second congresses 1903 to 1913 and the latter year became a United States senator from his state. He is called an Independent Republican.

For some time Senator Norris has been ing to attract the presidential lightning. His latest bid is to denounce the sad fate at put it of Nicaragua. He says

"The policy that the present administration

"We have no more right to send 20,000 men into Nicaragua to set up and maintain a government there than we would have to direct armed forces the government that ought to rule in Canada."

"We have lost the friendship of the nation south of the Rio Grande river and the little Central American government's words ring how soon it [Luz] will come to be ground beneath the heel of oppressive military rule from Washington.

"We are acting the part of a big hall-aid enforcing our will at the point of the bayonet against an unwilling people who are snared in economic slavery, an friend's voice.

"Every true American who holds the fundamental principles of our government and who wants to keep unswayed and to preserve the principles of democratic government ought to raise his voice in solemn protest against Indefensible cruel and murderous removal of the policy of the present administration in Nicaragua.

There's still the evening left. A whole evening before anything is likely to happen. Vee-vee consoled herself as she and Schuyler walked toward the hotel after their comely chaperoned boat ride.

Mrs. Crandall have absolutely no power over me.

She dashed with shame at the very way in which she parted herself from a man whom she loved. But she saw it as a relief that Schuyler's smile was no longer surprised, but looked at the girl in the manner of a father to the girl whom he believed to be his daughter.

She was passing through the lobby on her way to the elevator when a stranger, tall, thin, half-feminine, voice called her. She knew the voice well. It was Nan's. She knew a father's love in the way he said a word.

"Oh, Nan! What was that?" she asked in herself, but the face which she turned to Mrs. Fendick was a smiling face.

"Want to talk to you young woman?" Mrs. Fendick asked. "All you come up to my room."

"Want you to come to my room?" Vee-vee asked with a smile. "My little room on the first floor. Mr. Fendick has just gone to his room. I'll be there in a minute."

Although they were the only two passengers in the ascending elevator, Vee-vee felt crowded. Mrs. Fendick was so overwhelming big that she seemed to fill the car. She was like a mountain of flesh. Nan was big, but her mother was huge. Nan's aquiline nose became a bulk on the older woman's face. Little pinkish black eyes were almost submerged between overhanging black brows and tufts of hair of flesh.

As soon as they entered her room, Vee-vee went to the phone and gave an order for tea and coffee and sandwiches and cakes to be sent up within ten minutes.

She'll be in a better humor if she is eating, Vee-vee told herself with a grin.

For one looks here, Vee-vee Crandall, for some hope to have a frank talk with a man. Mrs. Fendick began and

"Oh, do let me wait until the food comes. I'll be right with you. I'm dreadfully warm aren't you? And a tiny bit hungry. Having made me nervous. I've noticed that you take tea with me. Mrs. Fendick. Don't you think the food is delicious here?"

"Oh, yes, it is. The Vienna coffee. Mrs. Fendick's husband's little. He also used to drink it. He's the latest thing and he's a little."

Vee-vee kept her remark about her husband's taste—or rather about European taste—until the waiter had arrived and departed. When Mrs. Fendick had consumed three sandwiches and half of her tall glass of iced coffee, Vee-vee permitted her, without further struggle, to open the subject which had brought her there.

"Now, Vee-vee Crandall—"

"My name is Vee-vee Crandall. Mrs. Fendick. Vee-vee corrected her softly. "Well, whatever you want to call yourself—I suppose it's none of my business—but I feel it my duty to tell you the plain truth about the young man you and my daughter Nan have been making much of yourselves over."

"Look! Vee-vee repeated gently. "Don't you think Mrs. Fendick that that is rather a strong word to apply to a man who is practically a stranger to you?"

"You don't have to rub it in that you and my daughter are in different circles, Mrs. Fendick. I'm the person hearing. The Fendicks are as good as the Crandalls and I'm the one who I'd have you know."

"I'm sure they are. Vee-vee smiled. "But what are you doing—the two of you? Mrs. Fendick. What are you doing? I'm sure you have something to say to me which you consider important. Is it about Nan? Mrs. Fendick?"

"No, it's not about Nan. It's about that fortune-teller that calls himself Schuyler Smith. Schuyler Smith," she repeated scornfully. "I'll hand it to him that he picked out a good name while he was about it. He started."

"I know Mr. Schuyler's original name. Vee-vee told her softly. But beneath her strong calm her heart was pounding with excitement rapidly. What did this middle-aged person know about Schuyler Smith?"

"Then I guess you know too that Mr. Schuyler B. Smith, Mrs. Fendick, kept on triumphantly using the name of who Vee-vee had caught a glimpse when Schuyler had dropped an envelope on the floor. It was a penmanship teacher that makes a profession of writing for a living."

"Oh, yes, I know nothing of the sort. Vee-vee replied. But I'll tell you why you insist upon discussing Mr. Schuyler's affairs with me."

"Because you're being taken in by him just as my poor Nan was. Mrs. Fendick pointed. I saw through him right away but nothing could turn Nan against him. I want a detective agency in New York to get a line on him for me and their report arrived today. Do you want to see it?"

"No, Vee-vee said, almost in a whisper. "Then you're a bigger fool than I thought you were. Mrs. Fendick snapped. But I'm going to do my duty by you anyway. Your mother will thank me. She'll appreciate it."

"Your fascinating penmanship is just a secretary. His fashionable East Fifty-Fourth Street address, which he used to impress everyone with, is not his own address. But that of his employer, Mr. Penmanship, Hammerhead is in Maine at his camp and he gave this young swamp a two weeks' vacation every summer allowing him to use one of his cars. Pampers the young upstart, makes him think he's as good as his better."

"Just a cheap little swamp man, saving his money all winter of the year to make a splash in a hotel like this. Makes the rounds of the swell hotels, where he knows he'll meet rich men's daughters—like my Nan and like you. Just a cheap four-flusher, a fortune-hunter."

"Mrs. Fendick I can't allow you to go on. Vee-vee cried vehemently, jumping to her feet. "Have you finished your sandwiches?" she asked with rude significance.

When Mrs. Fendick had made a struttingly furious exit speech, Vee-vee flung herself down upon the chair and burst into a fit of weeping.

When the storm had spent itself she sat up dabbling at her eyes with a wet ball of handkerchief. I don't care! I don't believe in a fortune teller! I'm glad her poor just a secretary. What if the poor does save all year to go to a swank hotel? Did I do the same thing? Of course he likes this kind

Love's Embers

A Sequel to "Revelations of a Wife"

By ADRIAN GARRISON

Preparing to Depart

I HAD no time for investigation of the problem she presented to the date immediately following my return from my conference with Philip Verities.

When I told my mother-in-law that Philip and Marion were engaged to be married, the evening before, she immediately suggested one of the whirling seasons of housecleaning with which she presents any prospective arrival of guests at the house.

With Katie harassed but an interested as herself dutifully following in her wake she went through the house as might the captain of a ship, making sure that no speck of dust or blackened finger mark was in evidence.

Presently I ventured to mention that Philip Verities was awaiting Lillian and Marion in his own luxurious car and that the primary details of how really detailed that was, were being discussed.
